K.L.C. Restaurant: A Human Resources Problem

K.L.C. is a successful restaurant located in a large city centre. The restaurant was established 15 years ago as a partnership. The restaurant aims to attract wealthy customers. The food served is of high quality and the chefs are well qualified and famous for their excellent skills.

Six months ago the business employed a new restaurant manager. Since then there have been problems with the staff.

Several of the experienced staff have left and the new manager replaced them with people who have never worked in a restaurant. A new system for paying staff was introduced. Waiters are now paid a small basic wage and then paid extra money depending on the number of customers served (a type of piece rate). The tips – cash bonuses from customers for good service – from customers are shared out equally at the end of the evening. The previous system of payment was based on hourly rates and tips were kept by the waiters themselves. Staff at the restaurant are unhappy and morale is low.

The new manager does not believe in off-the-job training for waiters. He expects the new recruits to watch and learn from the other waiters in the restaurant.

The manager only recruits new staff by asking existing employees if they have any friends or relatives who would like to work in the restaurant.

You have been asked by K.L.C. to look at the situation and write a report advising them on the best course of action to take to overcome the staff problems.

MEMORANDUM

To: Partners of K.L.C. Restaurant
 From: Restaurant manager
 Date: 21 May 2003
 Subject: Employment of new staff

As you know a number of employees left recently to work at other restaurants nearby. I have employed 4 new staff but still require several more to cover all the work. The new staff are all young and enthusiastic but they have not worked in restaurants before. They are friends of our existing waiters.

Vacancies still to cover are:

- 4 waiters/waitresses,
- 3 kitchen cleaners,
- 1 chef.

I hope that you will continue to let me make all the staffing decisions.
