Exercise 1

Read the guide about a sport called standup paddleboarding, and then answer the following questions.

Standup paddleboarding

What is it?

Standup paddleboarding (SUP) is becoming an increasingly popular sport worldwide. It is related to surfing and is a great way of keeping fit. SUP simply involves standing upright on a board in the water, and using a long paddle to move forwards. Some enthusiasts even perform yoga while balancing on their board!

Getting started

SUP is a sport you can pick up quite quickly. Begin by climbing onto the board in a kneeling position, just behind the centre point of the board. Hold on to both sides of the board – if your hands are close together, you will lose your balance. Slowly stand up, one foot at a time. To avoid falling off, place your feet approximately hip-width apart. Keep your hips steady, but the essential point is that you look at the horizon. Put the paddle in the water 60–90cm in front of you, and pull it towards you; when it is level with your feet, take it out of the water. If you lift it out after it passes your feet, you may lose control of the board. If you paddle more than six times on each side, the board will turn. If you paddle only once or twice, it becomes less efficient, as you need to change your arm positions each time. To go in a straight line, therefore, the ideal is to swap sides after four or five paddles. That's all you need to know to get started!

Some history

SUP has only recently become popular as a sport around the world, in countries including Malaysia and Mexico. However, humans have been doing something like it to get around for thousands of years. In Australia, people used canoes made from trees, and as there wasn't much room to sit in them, people would stand and use a stick as a paddle.

Where and when the contemporary sport of SUP developed is debatable. Many believe it was in Hawaii in the 1930s, when local surfers realised the benefit of standing, rather than sitting or lying on their boards as they had always done, when teaching tourists their sport. It is also suggested that surfers may have converted to SUP as it enabled them to get a better view of incoming waves.

The first official SUP race took place in 2007, in Lake Tahoe, California. However, it wasn't until 2012 that the International Surfing Association included SUP in their world championships. The success of that event in Peru has led to one being held every year since then, in countries such as Nicaragua and Mexico.

Exercise 2

Read the article about scouts and guides, and then answer the following questions.

Scouts and guides around the world

Many young people aged between 6 and 25 belong to the Scout Movement. This is a worldwide organisation, which was set up to help young people achieve their full potential as they grow up.

The organisation was established in 1907 by a British general called Robert Baden-Powell. While in the army, he wrote a publication about scouting (which means searching and keeping watch) and how to survive in the wild, called 'Aids to Scouting'. He realised how popular this was, and the result was another book, 'Scouting for Boys', which had less emphasis on the military. To test his ideas, he held a week-long camp for 21 boys from various schools in London, Poole and Bournemouth. This took place in August 1907, on Brownsea Island, which is in southern England. These boys had the chance to enjoy the outdoors, which became another of the movement's objectives.

The Scout Movement quickly became established in Europe, first in Gibraltar and soon after in Malta. It then spread throughout the rest of the world, starting in Chile in 1909. To begin with, the focus was on boys aged 11 to 18. However, as the movement grew, it was clear that younger boys, older boys and girls all wanted to be involved too. Baden-Powell's sister set up the Girl Guides in 1910, and in 1914 she started Rosebuds, later renamed Brownies, for younger girls. In the early years, boys and girls belonged to separate groups, but gradually more groups became mixed. By the 1990s, this applied to 100% of groups in some countries, but only two-thirds of groups globally. The movement's intention to help young people play useful roles in society applies equally to girls and boys.

By 2010, there were 32 million scouts, and by 2006, there were 10 million guides around the world, from a total of 216 different countries.

Country	Membership	Population participation	Scouting introduced	Guiding introduced
India	4 150 000	0.3%	1909	1911
Indonesia	17 100 000	7.2%	1912	1912
Philippines	2 150 000	2.2%	1910	1918
Thailand	1 300 000	1.9%	1911	1957
United States	7 500 000	2.4%	1910	1912

2007 marked 100 years of the Scout Movement, and events took place around the world to celebrate this centenary. To mark the occasion, a colourful badge was produced for scouts to sew onto their uniforms or bags. The design included the official scout emblem, as well as the phrase 'one world one promise', and images of doves and the globe.

2007 was also the 150th anniversary of Baden-Powell's birth. To honour both occasions, a flame was lit at Baden-Powell's grave in Nyeri. This is the place in Kenya where he spent the last few years of his life. The flame was then carried through several countries until it reached the UK. It was taken to the 21st World Jamboree, the main event of the year, with 40 000 scouts and guides present from around the world. Held in Chelmsford, England, this was a huge event, although not the largest – over 50 000 scouts camped in Birkenhead, England, for the Jamboree in 1929.

Many other centenary events took place around the world too. A team of scouts and guides from France were presented with a flag which they carried to the top of a mountain called Mont Blanc. Then, on a glacier near the resort of Crans-Montana, a group of Swiss scouts built several igloos from snow and ice, breaking a world record in doing so. This type of activity is typical of scout and guide groups, which encourage their members to learn survival skills.

The importance of scouting is reflected in the fact that films, artwork and even songs focus on the subject. Examples include 'Edge of Honor', an adventure film featuring scouts on a camping trip, and 'Troop Beverly Hills', a film which deals with scouting in a humorous way.

- (a) What was the name of the original book that Baden-Powell wrote about scouting?
.....[1]
- (b) Where was the first scout camp held?

Exercise 3

When Edwin Bakker was 15 years old, his parents gave him a camera for his birthday. He had been interested in photography for several years, and wanted to get a type of camera called a digital SLR, and learn how to use it. However, this was quite expensive, so he got an automatic digital camera instead. This is small enough to carry in his pocket, so Edwin takes it with him wherever he goes.

Edwin used to really enjoy photographing landscapes, and did a project on portrait photography in his art class at school. These days, he is into taking pictures of interesting architecture instead, and his art teacher even suggested that he should study photography at university. Edwin considered this, but decided that he would rather just keep it as a hobby.

Edwin is now 18, and as he did very well in his school exams this year, his parents have given him some cash to spend on his hobby. He did an online course last year, called Introduction to Photography, and now he wants to learn more. There are several courses that he could do near his home which is: De Hofstee, Nobelstraat, 1063 DE, Amsterdam, Netherlands. However, he has decided to take some time off between school and university, and spend a few months living and working in England. His aunt lives in a city called Bristol, and has said that he can stay with her for as long as he wants to.

Edwin looked online and found an interesting website – www.photography-foundation.co.uk – which was useful. He saw that this organisation runs two-day courses at a college not far from Bristol, so he provided his contact details – cameraman@bakkerhouse.com – and they sent him more information as well as an application form to fill in. Edwin checked the cost of their courses, and decided they are good value. Although his parents have already given him cash, they offered to write a cheque to pay for the course. However, he now has a credit card, and thinks it will be easier to use that, and keep the cash to spend while he is in England. He would like to try to buy a better quality camera there too.

The dates for the next three courses are December 12–13, January 16–17, and February 2–3. Edwin thinks he will still be in Amsterdam in December, and although he will be in Bristol for the January course, he feels it would be a bit too soon after arriving, so the last date suits him best. He knows he can stay at his aunt's house, but he thinks he might get more out of the course if he stays overnight at the college instead.

Edwin read that students study together in a group in the mornings, then can choose a different topic to study each afternoon. One session is about using lighting effectively, which he is definitely interested in. He is less keen on the ones about camera equipment and taking action shots, but he thinks one on colour might be worth trying.

Imagine you are Edwin. Fill in the form, using the information above.

Exercise 4

Read the article about how to get involved with art, and then complete the notes on the following page.

Getting involved with art

Are you interested in art? Do you enjoy visiting galleries or museums, but feel you want to do more than just walk around looking at the displays? If the answer to either of these questions is yes, then why not consider setting up your own art club? This could be an after-school club for children or teenagers, or a group for adults – age doesn't matter, as long as you are interested.

Go to a gallery or museum with a group of people, and try to get some discussion going about the art on display. The first point is to allow everyone plenty of time to look. If they rush around an exhibition, they won't notice things and won't have much to say. After a while, start to question people about what they are looking at. Different people notice different things when they are looking at art – so you can encourage them to share their thoughts and ideas with each other. Then, to take the group discussion one step further, ask people to explain why the artist might have done something. So, if someone comments that the lines in a drawing are not very clear, they might suggest that the picture is meant to represent uncertainty.

Another way to get people talking about art is to ask them to try to connect with what they see. This could be done by asking how the art makes them feel, or if it reminds them of anything they have seen before. And finally, encourage people to extend their responses. So, if they make a point or comment, ask them if they can explain it further or add more detail.

Of course, there is more to enjoying art than just visiting an art gallery or museum and talking about the displays. Why not consider a range of follow-up activities to do with your art club, which will help to make the visit more memorable?

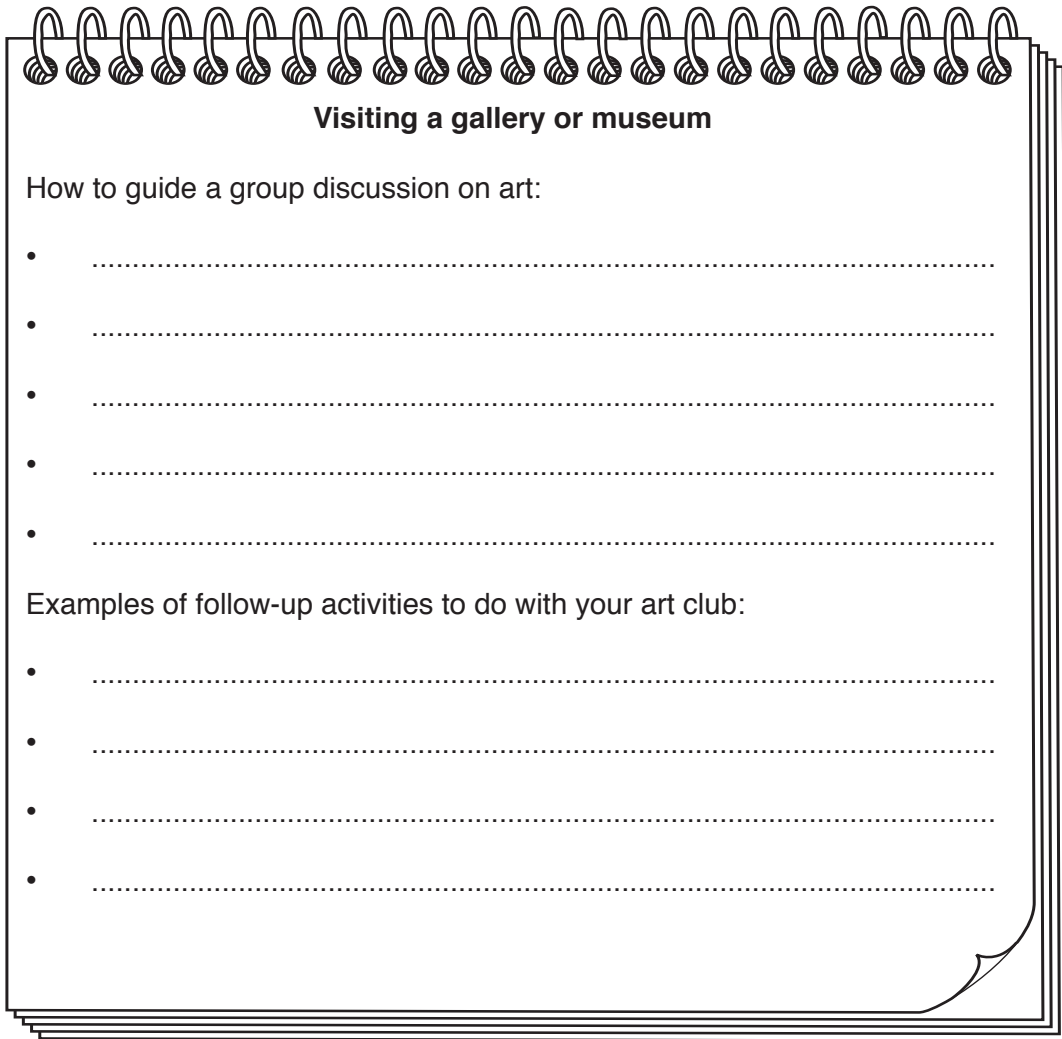

Many people enjoy buying postcards from a museum shop, as a souvenir of their visit. Why not ask each person in the group to design a postcard? This could show their favourite object, or even something they think could be included in the display. Another nice activity is for everyone to produce a leaflet advertising the exhibition. This allows them to use their writing skills as well as artistic ones. For those who like writing, and who have a good imagination, ask them to write a story about a character in a painting. Some members may prefer talking, but are less keen on having a formal discussion, so they could role-play an interview with an artist. Finally, how about getting everyone to create a piece of art of their own? This could be inspired by what they have seen, and could even be done using everyday objects such as plastic bags, string and cardboard boxes – whatever you have to hand.

Let the world of art come alive for you and your group. Experiencing art together with others is a great thing to do. Go and enjoy it!

You are going to give a talk to your art club about making the most out of gallery and museum visits. Prepare some notes to use as the basis for your talk.

Make short notes under each heading.

Exercise 5

Read the article about Jane Bolton, an open water swimmer.

Write a summary about the difficulties which are experienced by open water swimmers.

Your summary should be about 100 words long (and no more than 120 words long).

You should use your own words as far as possible.

You will receive up to 6 marks for the content of your summary, and up to 5 marks for the style and accuracy of your language.

Open water swimming

Jane Bolton, a successful open water swimmer, started swimming as a young child. She learnt to swim very quickly, and it was clear to her parents that this was going to be more than just a fun activity for Jane. They enrolled her in a local junior swimming club, and the coach confirmed that Jane was not only talented, but also displayed incredible strength and determination for her age. She was unusually disciplined too, a quality that is vital for someone who wants to pursue sport at a professional level. The coach suggested that Jane should try swimming in open water.

At the time, her family lived in the Lake District, an area in the United Kingdom which has several natural lakes. This meant that Jane could practise in them under the close supervision of a new personal trainer. This trainer put together a schedule of swimming and other exercises to build up Jane's stamina and upper-body strength. She had to start her day very early, at 05:00, and, just like other swimmers in her position, Jane found this quite challenging. The temperature of lakes and the sea is generally very low in the United Kingdom, so Jane's training was restricted to between May and September, when the temperature of the water ranges from 10 to 20 degrees Celsius.

Jane's first big national success came at the age of 15, when she became the fastest junior to swim across the English Channel, which is between England and France. Since then, Jane has had considerable success in international swimming competitions and has broken around 20 world records. Her most recent record, as an adult, is the world's fastest time to swim around Manhattan Island in the USA, using the 'butterfly' style of swimming. Jane swam the distance of 46 kilometres in the record time of 9 hours and 28 minutes.

Jane now has so much experience to offer that she has recently decided to train young swimmers who want to change from indoor swimming to open water swimming. The main difference that these youngsters notice is that the tide and the waves in the sea affect their swimming speed. For this reason, swimmers are advised to train over longer distances than they intend to swim in competitions. They find this incredibly demanding. However, it ensures that they are able to cope with these conditions. It is also advisable to check for the likelihood of strong winds or storms before going into open water. Thanks to Jane's extensive experience, she is the best person to give invaluable tips such as these to her trainees.

At the moment, Jane is coaching two young swimmers, and they are still getting used to the fact that there are no lines to guide them in open water, as there are in swimming pools. Jane always tells them to focus on a point in the distance, whenever possible, so that they don't lose their sense of direction. Nevertheless, she insists that they are accompanied by somebody in a boat who keeps an eye on them during their training sessions. After all, anything can happen in the sea, from being stung by a jellyfish to suffering from exhaustion. For Jane, safety comes first.

The next thing Jane is planning to do is set up an organisation to promote swimming among young people. She says that swimming has not only kept her fit, but has also taught her perseverance and discipline – two qualities that she considers necessary for success in life.

Exercise 6

You recently spent a week abroad at your friend's home. You had a wonderful time, but when you got home you realised you had left something important there.

Write an email to your friend about your stay, and the object you left behind.

In your email, you should:

- tell your friend what you enjoyed about your stay
- describe what you left behind, and why it is important to you
- say what you would like your friend to do with the object.

The pictures above may give you some ideas, and you should try to use some ideas of your own.

Your email should be between 150 and 200 words long.

You will receive up to 10 marks for the content of your email, and up to 9 marks for the style and accuracy of your language.

Exercise 7

In your English class, you have had a discussion about whether it is better to go abroad or stay in your own country for a holiday.

Here are two comments from students in your class:

I love going to another country and learning about its culture.

I think flying is bad for the environment!

Write an article for your teacher, giving your views.

The comments above may give you some ideas, and you should try to use some ideas of your own.

Your article should be between 150 and 200 words long.

You will receive up to 10 marks for the content of your article, and up to 9 marks for the style and accuracy of your language.

A series of horizontal dotted lines for writing, consisting of 20 lines.
